

Everyone should shave their heads

Block: E
Isabel Gom

Tired of bad hairdays, dandruff, grease, frizz, or even head lice? The truth of the matter is that all of these seemingly unavoidable problems have one simple answer: baldness. Yes, that is correct. It is a proven fact that the world would be a much better place if everyone shaved their heads.

For example, think of all the money that could be saved by not purchasing countless hazardous aerosols which are the main culprits in the death of the ozone layer.

Also, by being bald, citizens could support thousand of cancer patients world-wide who are undergoing chemotherapy. They would no longer be embarrassed or upset by the effects of the treatment, and therefore would be able to recover quickly and happily.

On a smaller scale, one would never have to worry about someone else's hair being shinier, straighter, curlier or even more luscious than anyone else's, for everyone would be "bald and beautiful."

Further, being on time for work or school would no longer be an issue. Thanks to being bald, time spent in front of the mirror would be reduced significantly to allow ample time for commuting in the morning.

Finally, answer-me-this: what is the national bird of the extremely dominating country of the United States? Yes, it is indeed the BALD eagle. This magnificent creature is not only a symbol of peace, but also of power, strength, and independence: all without a luscious head of hair. Therefore, baldness should be embraced for the well-being and prosperity of man-kind.

15/5 : well supported & engaging to read